Rural Alaskan family crashes White House State Dinner

Janet and Sean Neilson and their two-year-old daughter – socialites known for their possible roles in the upcoming reality television series, "The Real Housewives of Gustavus" -- were seen arriving at the White House and rubbing elbows with VIPs at a state dinner last month. "Honored to be at the White House for the state dinner in honor of India with President Obama and our First Lady!" Janet wrote on their Facebook page. But a White House official said the couple was not invited to the dinner. A woman describing herself as a publicist for the Neilsons denied that they were interlopers. Pressed for details, the publicist sent a statement saying simply: "The Neilsons were honored to be a part of such a prestigious event....All three of them had a wonderful time."

While the White House offered no official explanation, it appears to be the first time in modern history that anyone has crashed a White House state dinner. The uninvited guests were in the same room as President Obama, first lady Michelle Obama and Indian Prime Minister Manmohan Singh.

Child gets lip injection to further modeling career

In a case child welfare advocates are calling "downright bizarre", Ms. Téa Neilson, age 2, of Gustavus, Alaska recently became the youngest person in the world to undergo a procedure to augment her lips, apparently in an effort to re-energize her modeling career. The toddler explained, "In 2008, my papa took over 3,000 digital photos of me, but in 2009, he only took 1,500 photos....I became concerned that my modeling career was going down the potty!" After getting over the temper tantrum that ensued, the young girl calmed down, concluded that her baby face was becoming less of a selling point, and decided that a new look might turn things around. By plumping up her lips, Neilson hopes to market herself as the next Angelina Jolie, a celebrity actress who Neilson says is "really old and needs to go bye-bye".

Parents promote multi-purpose reusable bags

Entrepreneur parents Sean and Janet Neilson of Gustavus, Alaska, are promoting their latest product, a reusable shopping bag that doubles as a child carrier. Says Janet, "This solves the paper or plastic dilemma once and for all." Not only are the bags eco-friendly, but they also keep children up to 30 lbs contained while mom or dad shops. Sean explains, "Our daughter used to run up and down the aisles like a crazy person, but now she stays put in the bag ...every parent should have one of these!"

The Neilsons are stepping up production of a revised version of the original bag that includes titanium-reinforced child restraining straps that replace the original fabric-based straps. The latest version will be patented under the name “Titanium Tot Totes” (child not included).

Toddler crashes car into neighbor’s tree

Police responded to the scene of an accident on Tong Road last week in which renowned child athlete Téa Neilson crashed her “Little Tykes” car into a neighbor’s tree. The 2pm incident occurred in the middle of the afternoon when the toddler should have been napping. Neilson had no comment but sources close to her speculated that she was on her way to visit one of her many alleged boyfriends. Sponsors of the child athlete, including the Gustavus Community Chest, are considering pulling their endorsements pending the results of an official investigation.

Noted orator Neilson delivers another stirring speech

Famous for her motto, “I’ll talk to anyone, or anything, that will listen!”, Ms. Téa Neilson of Gustavus, Alaska traveled to northeastern Ohio in September to deliver an extended speech to an audience of ducks. The crowd swelled to record numbers as Neilson’s captivating speaking style mesmerized the flock. One female mallard was heard quacking, “She has an uncanny ability to relate to her audience...she makes you laugh, she makes you cry, just like Cats.” Unfortunately for her Ohio fans, Neilson’s speaking tour only included a few stops before she had to jet off to Colorado for the final leg of her tour. However, fellow passengers on the plane reported that they were treated to a lengthy impromptu delivery by the noted orator.

Child goes numb as parents force her to listen to NPR for an untold number of hours

Authorities are investigating an incident in Gustavus in which a toddler was allegedly forced to listen to National Public Radio (NPR) for an untold number of hours. A friend visiting the residence of two-year-old Téa Neilson reported that the child appeared to be numb and lethargic after a Daniel Schorr commentary. Fortunately, first responders were able to revive the dazed girl by playing a rousing rendition of “Baby Beluga” by Raffi. She is expected to make a full recovery, however her parents will be required to attend weekly NPR Anonymous meetings to address their addiction.

Xtratuf Estates Triathlon

Competitors from around the world gathered last summer to compete in the first annual Xtratuf Estates Triathlon. The event took place at the Neilson family homestead in Gustavus, Alaska.

The first event in the grueling race involved scaling a 12 foot ladder to adjust an array of solar panels. Next came a two-mile swim that required participants to complete 2,000 laps in an inflatable pool.

The final event was a potato digging race in the Neilson's garden. Exhausted but triumphant, first-place winner Téa Neilson said, "I was a bit scared on the ladder, which cost me some time, so I decided to make up for it by swimming naked to reduce my drag coefficient – it worked!"

New "Mini Dipper" constellation discovered

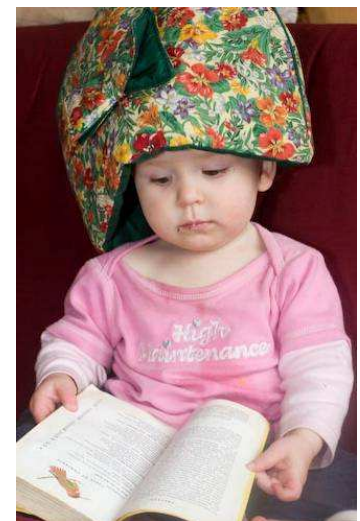

Astronomers announced yesterday that after years of searching, they had finally located the third and final constellation in the Dipper Trilogy. Those who have seen the formation, which has been named the "Mini Dipper", say it bears an uncanny resemblance to related constellations the Big Dipper and the Little Dipper. Experts had long suspected that a third Dipper constellation existed, but were surprised by the unlikely location of the formation on a young girl's face in Alaska. Photos submitted by amateur astronomer Sean Neilson have led astronomers to believe that the constellation is composed of noodle matter.
